Entry Name: Bucolic Beauty

Category: Lifestyle

Client: Glengate

Glengate believes in creating spaces that bring people together. And to do that, they bring together all of the components of a property into one company, from design to construction to ongoing care.

For this project, the goal was a space that felt relaxed, bucolic, and soft underfoot—without a continuous slab of masonry. Bluestone banding defines the perimeter, framing a field of stepping stones that creates structure while keeping an open, garden-like feel. Each stone was placed to provide firm, level footing for chaise lounges, blending function with a casual aesthetic. Instead of sod, Mazus ground-cover fills the joints, forming a lush, fast-spreading carpet that thrives in shade. The result is a space that feels effortlessly integrated into the landscape—structured yet soft, and as practical as it is inviting.

To fully show the scope of this gorgeous project, I relied on all my tools and skills: drone and wide angle images show the scale and full broad view, macro details give an intimate understanding of the plantings, and compositions allow you to truly see and experience the space.
